

MARSHALL, MAN OF MYSTERY

(PART THREE)

The career of General Marshall has many oddities. For example, we know of no convincing explanation ever being given for one of the great puzzles of his life—why it was that he permitted General Eisenhower, at virtually the last minute, to step almost unprepared into supreme command of the Invasion, with all its opportunities for acclaim and world prominence—when all indications are that he coveted, and had fully expected for months to accept the personal direction of that expedition?

There is an interesting point for speculation. If, as seems most plausible, President Roosevelt personally insisted that Marshall remain in Washington, what motive could the President have other than wanting to continue to lean on a trusted and ingenious adviser. That line of reasoning would much strengthen the conjectures made in this article, that Marshall eventually came to be the number one confidante and brain-truster both of Roosevelt and Truman. Certainly it is interesting to note that just at the time when Marshall was unable to leave Roosevelt's side, Harry Hopkins, usually considered the principal brain-truster, was bouncing cheerfully about all over the world—Russia, England, etc., etc.

Quite different is attempting to fathom the motives which led the General to permit his wife to publish an intimate biography of his life during the political crisis of 1946, when his own reputation as a result of the Pearl Harbor matter was in its most shaky stages, and when the Truman Administration was dropping to what possibly the lowest point ever reached by that up-and-down regime.

Offhand, we can think of no other world-prominent figure who was biographed by his wife while he was still alive and still active. The question of taste cannot be avoided. Very few of the world's great men would have cared to face that question, under similar circumstances. Why did Marshall do so? Was there some compelling motive for the book's publication which made it necessary to get an explanation or defense across at that particular moment—perhaps the singularly lame explanation which Mrs. Marshall made for the General's inattentiveness to the American interests on the occasion of Pearl Harbor (she had broken four ribs several weeks earlier, and says he was preoccupied with her condition)?

But dropping questions of taste, and reverting to political considerations, the concept of answering certain embarrassing questions, and getting certain laudatory propaganda across in a semi-official manner without himself revealing his interest, is a concept entirely in keeping with the mental capacity of the man who dreamed up the multi-billion Marshall plan and who "bailed out" President Truman after the 1946 Democratic Party disasters.

Mrs. Katherine Tupper Marshall's book, "Together", bears no reference to professional assistance in its preparation, yet it is beyond credibility to think that none was given. General Marshall surely would not have trusted his own judgment, nor that of his wife (no matter how able), with a critical national election only months away. It would not have been fair to his "chief", Mr. Truman, for him to have done so. And the internal evidence is that the book is "professional" from cover to cover.

A completely modest man would never have permitted the innumerable laudatory passages, no matter how ingeniously phrased, to be printed in such a fashion; and the world is full of outstanding men who would have refused pointblank to allow their wives to write about their lives and careers. Why Marshall chose to do so is one of the major enigmas about him.

Regardless of the date on which General Marshall became a key political figure in the New Deal, there certainly is no question that eventually he did achieve that important, though largely secret, responsibility.

Twice President Truman has drawn him out of semi-retirement to rescue the flagging fortunes of the Trumanites. One was

Counterfeits Continue To Circulate in District

Officials at Bristol Trust Company have been advised by the U. S. Secret Service that counterfeit Federal Reserve notes in $10 and $20 denominations on all Federal Reserve banks continue to circulate. "They are deceptive and not readily detected," is the information sent to the local banking institution. It is added "These counterfeits are of good workmanship and are printed on fair quality paper, with red and blue fibres appearing in genuine notes being simulated on some of the issues. The portraits are lifeless, lack depth proper shading, and the eyes lack lustre."

The list of recent issues of counterfeits currently appearing follows, with denominations, districts, check letter, front plate number, back plate number, series, given in that order: $10, San Francisco (L), J. 100, 219, 1934C; $10, Dallas (K), J. 16, 1219, 1934C; $20, Richmond (E), F. 28, 88, 1934C; $20, Minneapolis (D), F. 11, 488, 1934C.

The ground for the new Educational Building was broken on Nov. 12, 1950. The cornerstone exercises on Sunday morning will include an address by the Rev. Dr. E. E. Fischer, president of the Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania, who will be the guest preacher. The pastor of the church is Rev. Bernard Repass.

TWO TO HOSPITAL

"Pattie" Maniscola, aged four years, was treated at Harriman Hospital for a dog bite on her face; Steven Rudzinski, Croydon, whose finger was broken when a piece of lumber fell on his foot, was also taken to that hospital.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Communist delegates to discuss a Korean cease-fire should now be well on their way to Kaesong, where the talks will open tomorrow.

Tokyo headquarters announced that United Nations spokesmen would travel by jeep or helicopter to this preliminary contact. The enemy commanders told General Ridgway by radio, "We agree with you," on plans to safeguard the missions. Allied fliers have already been alerted to avoid a "safety corridor" along which the Communists are believed to be driving south. Field facilities to serve the delegates are being rushed to completion. Meanwhile fighting continued, with patrols exchanging fire and both sides laying down barrages.

President Truman will ask the Kremlin to inform the Russian people that the citizens of this country "deeply regret the artificial barriers" separating the two nations and that Americans "desire to live in friendship with all other peoples." Jacob A. Malik, the Soviet delegate at the U. N., departing for home, wished well to all those who "fight for peace and friendship."

The United States has proposed that fifty nations meet in San Francisco in September to sign a treaty of peace with Japan. Participation by the Soviet bloc was considered unlikely.

Benefits derived by the Soviet Union and satellite countries through commercial treaties and tariff agreements with this country are to be progressively abolished. Washington has renewed its demand that Moscow return 670 lend-lease ships handed over in the war.

The directors of The Associated Press issued a statement defending the competency of William N. Oatis, convicted by Czechoslovakia on an espionage charge, and declaring their intention to fight for his release.

Iran has decided to "ignore" or "reject" the decision by the World Court at The Hague in the oil situation. New moves were made at Abadan against the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company in defiance of the court, while in Teheran street fighting broke out between minor groups of excited Iranians.

Spokesmen for more than a million retail establishments called on a Senate committee to recommend a general sales tax as a means of paying for defense and of fighting inflation. The House finished general debate on a new defense-production bill.

Congress was told that the Air Force was "sadly behind" on its expansion program and that unless approval was granted for $3,500,000,000, the program would be delayed.

PLAN TO REVIVE THE ZONING LAW; ASKS SUGGESTIONS

Council Committee Eager To Have Suggestions From the Public

WILL REVIEW IDEAS

All Suggestions Must Be Submitted Not Later Than July 25th

Wallace, George Duffy, Francis Kryven and Joseph DeLesso, are asking for suggestions for revision of the ordinance which was voted down in council.

In a letter to borough councilmen, officials of the Bristol Chamber of Commerce, Mill street Business Men's Association and Bristol-Harman Business Men's Association suggestions are requested, wherein it is thought, that the ordinance previously submitted should be changed.

A copy of the ordinance is on file in the office of the borough secretary, John Paglione, Municipal Building, for those who wish to see it.

The letter to councilmen, Bristol Chamber of Commerce and the businessmen's groups reads:

Attached is a revised copy of the Zoning Ordinance prepared for the Borough of Bristol in July 1949. The

DIPLOMATIC DOG FIGHT

Recently there have come to light the particulars of a controversy that more than a century ago set the U. S. diplomatic world agog. One June morning in 1823 the U. S. Frigate Congress lay at anchor off New Castle, Del.
Pacing her quarterdeck was her commander, Capt. James Biddle, USN, erect as a ramrod, a martinet and a stickler for all the niceties of the naval etiquette of his day.

He was in a fuming rage for before his eyes his quarterdeck was being piled high with household goods—old churns, old saddles, an old cart, an old phaeton, et cetera—as he would later report. In due course there was piped over the side the owner of these chattels—Caesar Augustus Rodney, onetime state legislator, congressman, senator, attorney general of the United States, and now the lately appointed first United States minister to the Argentine.

An extreme extrovert, Caesar A. Rodney was highly regarded and most popular among his fellow Delawareans. A crowd cheered him from the shore. With his wife and family, which included nine unmarried daughters, he moved into the after cabin and quarters of Captain Biddle.

The voyage to the River Plate was long and roundabout and from the first port of call, Gibraltar, there drifted back to Washington many a toothsome rumor of the endless dissension, confusion and trouble aboard the Congress.
Finally when she made Rio de Rodney party left her and went on to Buenos Aires by private charter.

To a man Delaware rose to the defense of her native son. The legislature passed a unanimous resolution complaining of "a series of studied insults and contumely on the part of the commander, James Biddle," and called for an inquiry. In the streets of Wilmington the captain was burned in effigy. The affair spouted out in a lengthy denial by Biddle addressed to the secretary of the Navy. Here is an excerpt:

"It has been asserted that while at Gibraltar I had kept one of Mr.
Rodney's old saddles at the masthead. This is quite absurd. What did happen was this: One morning early at sea when I was on deck this old saddle of Mr. Rodney's which was lying on the quarterdeck was wet and offensive and I made one of the men run it up to the peak to dry. In about 20 minutes afterward it occurred to me that this might be considered as done in derision and therefore I ordered it to be hauled down."

And why not, one may ask.
Was not Caesar A. Rodney, it not Captain Biddle's guest, aboard the Congress as the guest and representative of the United States government?

Proportionately, more liquor is consumed at Washington than in any other American city. The government still stands, but some of the boys who work at it may be finding it difficult to do so.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

White House Weakness

Washington, July 7.
The really frightening thing about the existing Washington situation is the exceeding feebleness of the White House leadership. This has been true from the beginning of the Administration—but before the crisis it was not too vital. Now it is. Because, now with the pouring out of almost uncounted billions for defense and the necessity for effective use of all our resources, grave problems have arisen which if botched or bungled threaten us with economic chaos.

The trouble with Mr. Truman is, first, that he fails to act when he has the power and action is needed; second, when, after long and costly delays, he finally acts, he lacks the strength to be effective. Naturally, White House weakness is reflected all down the Administration line.
No organization can be much better than the man at the top. There is nothing in the least sinister or wicked about Mr. Truman. But though he has proclaimed himself a "fighting man" there seems little force in his fighting, and most of his reputation along this line is based on the idea that he stands by his friends when attacked. However, there have been one or two occasions when he most notably failed to do that.

The lamentable truth is that while he has made a number of fights, they have been mostly over appointments and he has by no means won all of them. So far as can be recalled he has won no big fight since he has been President.
As a matter of fact, he has no made any. At the beginning of the defense effort he evaded conflict with the organized labor bosses who balked at his program and are still dragging their feet. Nor has he shown any disposition to come to grips with the farm lobby, which stands in the way of effective price control. Also, though he has talked a good deal about the danger of inflation he has utterly neglected to fight for the essential economies in nondefense expenditures, the terrific importance of which has been pointed out many times by many persons.

At no time, however, has the feebleness of the Truman leadership been more clearly exposed than in the defeat in Congress this week on the issue of controls upon which the Administration's program wholly depends and without which the danger of a ruinous inflation is repeatedly increased. With a clear party majority in both House and Senate, and with an overwhelming press support, Congress rejected Mr. Truman's pleas and refused to give him what he asked, though the first importance of the questions raised was generally conceded.

Beyond doubt this was the most humiliating reverse the President has suffered since he took office in 1945. It was not possible to blame it upon the alleged iniquitous coalition of "reactionary Republicans" and Southern Democrats.
For the extraordinary fact is that in both House and Senate the Administration's own regular Democratic leaders refused to follow the White House lead and ignored the presidential appeals. No such exhibition as this has been seen in Congress within the recollection of anyone conversant with congressional history. During the Roosevelt era, while there were times when the majority leaders did not personally favor the Roosevelt program, there was no such bolt as staged in the Senate last Friday when Senator McFarland, of Arizona, the official Democratic leader, and the Democratic whip, Senator Johnson, of Texas, departed from the White House proposals and voted with its opponents.

Also, upon several votes, that example of Democratic organization regularity, Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, did the same thing. The result of the defection of these Administration leaders left defense of the Administration program in the hands of Senators Lehman, of New York, and Benton, of Connecticut—two senators conspicuously lacking in personal popularity and influence. They fared rather badly in the bitter debate and were utterly unable to avert the debacle. It may be that before the extension of the emasculated controls—to July 31—expires a sufficient pressure can be brought upon Congress to compel a reversal and insure an effective bill. That is what can be hoped for, but there is no surety about it, and the revelation of Mr. Truman's inability to keep his own leaders in line has had a debilitating effect.

Altogether, when the national danger is so clear and acute it is a depressing spectacle to find that the President, even when he is absolutely right, can be so easily and with such complete impunity ignored by his own party heads in Congress. It says what little confidence remains in the presidential adequacy. Also, it makes the renewed assertions by his jobholder friends of the National Committee that he will be renominated and re-elected seem hollow, indeed. The way his congressional leaders treated him this week isn't the way party leaders usually treat a President they expect to be renominated and re-elected.

Some Tips to the Newlyweds

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

AS a psychologist and a husband married to the same wife for 39 years, I venture a word to newlyweds.

You have entered on a mutual undertaking which will undoubtedly have more to do with yourselves as persons than anything else during your lifetime. How happy and successful your marriage will be will depend pretty largely on how hard each of you tries to make a go of it. To this end each of you will strive to build the other, to build on his or her strengths, so that the spouse will grow to be a happier and inwardly richer person. Then each of you will have a more lovely mate to live with. Successful marriage can't be built on selfishness.

Will Discover More
You may already have discovered in your spouse some qualities and ways you wish he or she did not have. And you surely will discover more later. If you follow your normal human urges you will tell your spouse of these qualities and ways you don't like, even grow vexed over them; and before you know it, they may seem so large and numerous as to overshadow the qualities and ways you have liked.

Each of you, even from your earlier courtship days, may have supposed you were going to help the other by calling to his or her attention his or her faults and failures. Indeed, an oft-repeated pledge by engaged couples to each other is that from then on they are going to help each other by pointing out to each other frankly his or her faults. Nothing they ever promised each other will they have carried out so faithfully, as any married couple could testify. No pledge is necessary. Human nature takes care of that.

But if engaged couples and newlyweds really wanted to make a useful pledge for helping each other, it would be a pledge to point out to each other his or her strengths and virtues and to celebrate continually the success in each other.

Perhaps the greatest pitfall to newlyweds is the temptations for each to begin talking to a relative or friend about some disappointment or shortcoming felt or observed in the other, and this friend laps up such talk as eagerly as a cat laps up spilled milk. Be too proud to stoop to such gossip lest you sabotage your marriage.
If you suppose the matter is serious enough to discuss with anybody, seek the help of a trained professional marriage counselor.

Moral Integrity
You have married because you have had faith in each other's moral integrity. Each of you is going to strive without ceasing to deserve and maintain this faith by your spouse in you; and this may require tremendous self-discipline.

Plan to have children, if you really want to find security in marriage. As the eminent psychologist Dr. Henry Link points out in his recent book "The Way to Security," about the most apparent cause of unhappiness between couples is the unwilling-ness of one or both to have children. If you newlyweds postpone parenthood unduly long with the hope that you can better afford it financially later, you will risk the chance of never finding such a time or even of not being able physically to have children at all.
Let me advise that you read Dr.
Link's book; also "Marriage for Moderns" by Dr. Henry A. Bowman.

Clever Story of The "Glass Menagerie" Will Be Enacted

TREVOSE, July 7 — Tennessee Williams' prize-winning play, "The Glass Menagerie," takes its place in the summer theatre season on July 16th, when it opens at Trevoze Summer Theatre.

"The Glass Menagerie" is a powerful story, cleverly told in unusual theatrical method. In the Trevoze production, Gladys McKnight fills the role of Amanda; and Scott McHugh plays the role of Tom. Rosemary Scott and William Dempsey are Laura and Jim, the shy daughter and the gentleman caller.

The production is directed by Helen Bauer, with special staging and lighting effects by John Burns and George Hyndman. Sound effects are by Martin Pinkser and Harold Strohm.

Today's Quiet Moment

By The Rev. Louis J. Helm
Pastor
Wilkinson Memorial Methodist Church, Croydon

O God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for this day with its opportunities for service. We thank Thee for food and clothing. We thank Thee for friends, companions and loved ones.

We pray Thee to make us channels of blessing this day. May all who come in contact with us take knowledge that we have been with Thee.

Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one. This we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

VOLTZ DEFEATS HILLTOP NINE IN PLAY-OFF GAME

PENNDLE, July 7—Voltz-Texaco eliminated Hilltop A. C. from the tie-playoffs of the Tri-County Baseball League last evening on the Penndle Memorial field. Final score was: Voltz-Texaco, 12; Hilltop, 2. The Voltz-men met Southampton for the first half crown Monday evening on the Newtown field. The gasmen had 16 hits in the fracas with every player getting at least one hit. "Pete" Powlis again had three hits while Barney Ludwig drove in three runs with a double and single.

The Bristol boys scored seven runs in the first three frames with a big "4" in the fourth.

While the Voltz-men were battering the horse-hide all over the field, Hilltop had trouble in getting to the shoots of "Bill" McGerr. McGerr allowed the Hillies but six hits. He whiffed six and gave up two passes.

Bob Whitfield did the tossing for Hilltop. He was very wild in giving up nine passes.

Plan To Revive Zoning Law; Asks Suggestions

passage of this ordinance was voted against by the Borough Council, although the sum of $1300 was appropriated for the survey and preparation of this ordinance.

Since that time the need for zoning has become more and more evident, not only in the Borough of Bristol but throughout the entire County. Many specific complaints have been received that could have been avoided or corrected through the use of a Zoning Ordinance. Further proof of the need for zoning can be seen in the ever increasing number of nearby communities who have adopted or who are considering the adoption of zoning legislation.

The present Zoning Committee is giving you this opportunity to suggest any changes in the present ordinance that you feel should be made before it is again presented to the Borough Council for adoption. These suggestions must be presented in writing to the City National Bank of Philadelphia, 1518 Walnut st., Phila. The claim grows out of a financial transaction dated April 10, for the amount of $4200.

This Committee will endeavor to review and adopt all worth-while suggestions so that an ordinance can be presented that will be satisfactory to all concerned. Your co-operation will be appreciated.

THE WAR

pounded the east coast Korean port of Wonsan, Friday, in one of the heaviest strikes of the war. Wonsan has been under constant Naval bombardment for more than four months. The Navy announcement reported the port was "ripped almost to shreds in what may prove to be the biggest carrier air strike since World War II." Fighter planes and dive bombers of Task Force 77 unmercifully blasted the Red-held port from dawn until after dark. The Navy said the attack "stamped out" a Communist buildup in the Wonsan area, some 80 miles north of the 38th Parallel. Large fires were kindled in the port area by warship bombardment and by the air strike.

the occasion referred to earlier—after the 1946 Republican landslide, when Marshall broke precedence by becoming the first professional soldier to undertake the functions of Secretary of State during times of peace.

Once the Democratic regime was safely past the crossroads of the 1948 presidential election, General Marshall stepped down again (he then was 78, and according to his own account, had been eager for years to retire). But the profound reaction against President Truman and Secretary of State Acheson during 1950 resulted in another hurry call for General Marshall. Once again he is in there pitching, and once again President Truman has been lifted out of the hole he seems always hurriedly to dig for himself whenever General Marshall turns his back.

What is cooking on the back of the stove for the uphill task of keeping the New Dealers in power in Washington next year remains to be seen. Likewise it remains for the future to determine how many of these future lines of defense and strategy will prove eventually to be the handiwork of General Marshall.

One thing is exceedingly clear—no matter who planned what, in the turbulent events of the past six months, with surprise following surprise, and the shocks still continuing, not a single key event, not a single vital decision, took place without General Marshall being right at the President's elbow.

In our opinion, for whatever it may be worth, the most outstanding and sensational accomplishments of General Marshall are not to be sought for in the field of military accomplishment, nor of diplomatic achievement either—but in the field of politics. For years we have believed, and think so more than ever today, that he has been the New Deal Tallyrand, has been the power behind the throne of two successive New Deal presidents for at least twelve years.

It has taken something akin to magic to keep these two administrations in power. We believe the magic came from the brains of General Marshall.

But we believe that the cost has been frightfully, incredibly great to the American people.

We believe that the financial results of the Marshall Plan and the other vast spending schemes in which General Marshall has had a finger have so undermined our national economy that continued inflation is a foregone conclusion, and that we never will be able to return to a condition of gold-standard solidarity and confidence which we once possessed.

We believe that the trick of dragging this nation into the recent World War "through the back door," contrary to wishes of the people, was a destructive force brought to bear upon the will and capacity of our citizens to govern themselves, which may in the long run destroy our republic and leave us no choice but that of a military dictatorship along welfare-state lines.

We believe that the successive cold-blooded manipulations of world affairs has destroyed any possibility of a successful United Nations, has needlessly and unscrupulously betrayed the faith of almost uncountable countries which relied upon our good will and our promises—betrayals that date as far back as our failure to stand up boldly on behalf of Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania and Ethiopia even before the World War began, that reached their crescendo at Yalta where Marshall was the closest of Presidential advisers, and still continue with the efforts of our State Department to throw Formosa over to the Chinese Communists.

The seeds of a Third World War, in which our survival is no more than a gamble, have been sowed recklessly during the political maneuvers of re-electing New Dealers, along lines, we believe, charted by General Marshall.

1 tablespoon lemon juice or vinegar Few grains pepper.

Thaw fish fillets according to directions on package. Mix milk, Worcestershire sauce, mustard, lemon juice, salt and pepper thoroughly, and let stand several minutes. Arrange fillets in bottom of a lightly buttered shallow baking pan sufficiently large so that fillets do not overlap. Cover with sauce. Broil under medium heat until lightly browned, about 15 to 18 minutes. It is not necessary to turn fillets while broiling. Baste with the sauce if fish becomes dry. Fillets are done when tender and are easily flaxed with a toothpick. Lift carefully to heated serving plate and spoon any remaining sauce over fish. Garnish with parsley and serve immediately with lemon wedges. Makes 4 servings. Note: 1 pound fresh fish fillets may be used in place of frozen fillets.
